3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

CALIFORNIA BRUSH FIRE THREATENS HOMES, PROMPTS EVACUATIONS

1 A brush fire outside Los Angeles was threatening thousands of homes and has prompted mandatory evacuation of local residents, authorities said. The 200-acre brush fire in Calabasas, a small Los Angeles County city some 10 miles inland from the Pacific Ocean and about halfway between the Malibu and Santa Monica, was reportedly triggered when a vehicle hit a utility pole, downing power lines. Several homes were damaged, fire officials said, and mandatory evacuations were ordered for some Calabasas residents as about 250 firefighters battled to contain the blaze. Helicopters and air tankers were also brought in to make water drops. CNN quoted Calabasas city manager Tony Corrales as saying that 3,000 homes had been evacuated. REUTERS

MILITARY IDENTIFIES FORT HOOD SOLDIERS KILLED IN TEXAS FLOODS

2 The U.S. military released the names of eight of nine soldiers who were killed this week when their vehicle overturned in flood waters in Texas. The soldiers died when their military vehicle flipped over in a flood-swollen creek on Thursday at Fort Hood Army post in central Texas. Three survivors were released from hospital on Friday. Among those killed were Staff Sergeant Miguel Angel Colonvazquez, 38, Specialist Christine Faith Armstrong, 27, Private First Class Brandon Austin Banner, 22, Private First Class Zachery Nathaniel Fuller, 23, and Private Isaac Lee Deleon, 19. Private Eddy Raelaurin Gates, 20, Private Tysheena Lynette James, 21, and Cadet Mitchell Alexander Winey, 21, also died in the accident, the circumstances of which remain unknown. REUTERS

SYRIAN AND RUSSIAN AIRCRAFT STEP UP BOMBING OF ALEPPO CITY

3 Nearly 50 air strikes hit rebel-held areas in and around the Syrian city of Aleppo on Sunday in some of the heaviest recent raids by Russian and Syrian government aircraft, residents and a monitoring group said. The group, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, also said an unidentified war plane had crashed in countryside south of Aleppo, in an area where Islamist rebel fighters are battling the Syrian army and Iranian-backed forces. It had no information on what caused the crash. A civil defense worker said at least 32 people were killed in the rebel-held parts of the city during the air strikes, with 18 bodies pulled from flattened buildings in the Qatari neighborhood, the worst hit. REUTERS

SEVERE STORMS/ TROPICAL STORM COLIN?

A line of severe storms swept through the Northeast Sunday evening with damaging winds, reports of hail and numerous lightning strikes, the deadliest weather phenomena on the planet.

Hundreds of severe thunderstorm watches and warnings were posted throughout the Northeast along with marine warnings up and down the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic shorelines.

The severe system is now off the coast with a return to beautiful sun-filled tranquil weather conditions Monday. Boston never made it into the warm, unstable wedge of air, so it remained cool on Sunday with plenty of rain, fog and mist. The hardest hit area Sunday was across Pennsylvania.

Next up is a newly formed tropical system. As of Sunday night it was nearing tropical storm status. The tropical system was emerging into the southern Gulf of Mexico and should become the third named storm this season.

I'm anticipating by the time you read this you will be hearing about newly formed Tropical Storm Colin. Colin should pick up speed and most likely strike somewhere near Cedar Keys on the west coast of Florida, north of Clearwater late Monday. Right now, projected intensity is forecast to max out at 60 mph. Long-range models are indicating that Colin should buzz off the Southeast coast late Tuesday and then move out to sea by Wednesday.

The good news is the rest of the work week or vacation week (you lucky dog) looks great!

Red Bull announces the weirdo teams they picked for Boston's first Flugtag

The official list of the oddballs who will be soaring off a platform into the Charles River this summer has been released.

The 30 teams selected to take part in the Red Bull Flugtag competition on Aug. 20 — picked from among 200 applicants — are now listed on the energy drink company's website. They were also unveiled in a ceremony at the Boston pub M.J. O'Connor's on Thursday night.

The crop of competitors who made the cut represent a wide swath of New England eccentrics, Red Bull said in a press release.

"Team members include (but are not limited to) teachers, architects, engineers, carpenters, mechanics, students, slackers, salesmen, and hell, even bloggers," the release reads. "Craft designs range from duck boats (shocker), Boston sports references (even more of a shocker), all the way to a selfie-stick ... yes a selfie-stick. 2016 will truly be the year that Boston writes itself into the history books of flight."

A group planning an ode to the MBTA called Breakdown Charlie and a hotdog launching crew calling itself The Flying

A scene from the Red Bull Flugtag in Tampa. RED BULL

Franks are among those who will be competing for top prize this summer.

According to Red Bull's website counting down the month and a half until the event, Flugtag (flying day in German) "challenges the brave and brainy to design, build and pilot homemade flying machines off a 28-foot high flight deck in hopes of soaring into the wild blue yonder ... or more often, plunging into the waters below."

Competitors are scored based on how far they fly, how creative their design is and on the caliber of a choreographed dance number they perform before takeoff.

Even Barstool Sports, the notorious mega-blog, has a team: The Barstool Pirates.

"Often referred to as the pirate ship of the internet, Captain Davey Pageviews has long been navigating Barstoolsports through the tumultuous waters of the online blogging game," reads their team's description. "The Barstool pirate ship finally comes to life!"

Also among those who will be competing is an Egyptian-themed crew once called Sphinx-tor (as in, Sphinx meets sphincter), which has apparently been asked to change their name.

According to team leader Alex Ezorsky, they will now be known as What Sphinx? (as in, "what stinks," in case you didn't catch that).

"It's the same plan, it's the same structure, just a different butt joke," Ezorsky said. SPENCER BUELL

Chelsea police seek suspect caught on video after deadly hit-and-run

Police in Chelsea are hoping video footage of a fatal hit-and-run suspect's vehicle will help identify the driver.

A 25-year-old man, identified as Marco Cruz of Chelsea, was struck and killed Saturday night in the area of 284 Washington Ave., according to police.

Officers responded to the scene around 10:15 p.m. and transported Cruz to a nearby hospital. He died of his injuries Sunday morning.

Chelsea Police Chief Brian Kyes on Sunday tweeted out a video which he said showed the suspect vehicle, a silver Toyota four-door sedan, with front-end damage and its left headlight out.

He tweeted the video was taken from a camera at the intersection of

NOTICE OF MASSACHUSETTS MARLBORO LIGHTS CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENT

If, during any portion of the time period from November 25, 1994 to November 25, 1998, you were

- a resident of Massachusetts who purchased Marlboro Lights cigarettes in Massachusetts, or
- a resident of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island or Vermont who regularly purchased Marlboro Lights cigarettes in Massachusetts, you may be entitled to payment under the Settlement of the class action described in this Notice.

What is the case about? Plaintiff brought a class action lawsuit against Philip Morris, claiming that by describing Marlboro Lights as "light" cigarettes that delivered "lowered tar and nicotine," Philip Morris falsely represented that Marlboro Lights were less harmful and delivered lower tar and nicotine than Regular Marlboros, when that was not true.

Following a five week trial, the Court found that Philip Morris willfully violated the Massachusetts consumer protection laws because it knew that Marlboro Lights were no less harmful than Regular Marlboros, and that the vast majority of addicted smokers did not get less tar and nicotine from Marlboro Lights than from Regular Marlboros.

The Court awarded the Class statutory damages of $25 per class member, or a total of $4,942,500, plus prejudgment interest at a rate of 12% per year. As of the date of the settlement agreement that interest totaled $10,331,315.

What will the Class get under the Settlement? Philip Morris has agreed to pay the Class the full amount that was awarded by the Court after the trial, which totals $15,273,815. Class members who submit valid and timely Claim Forms will receive equal shares of the net recovery, up to a maximum amount of $225 per Class member.

How can a Class member get his or her share of the recovery? If you are a member of the Class and would like to receive a share of the recovery, you must submit a valid Claim Form no later than November 28, 2016. You can obtain a Claim Form by contacting the Settlement Administrator toll-free at (844) 836-3605 or by email at claims@MALightsSettlement.com. The Claim Form is also available and may be submitted online at: www.MALightsSettlement.com

Can a Class member object to the Settlement? The Court will hold a hearing on the fairness of the Settlement on September 29, 2016. If you are a Class Member, you may object to the Settlement or any aspect of it. The full Notice explains the requirements for filing and serving an objection. The deadline for objections is August 19, 2016.

How can a Class member get more information? This Notice is a summary and does not describe all the details of the Settlement. You are encouraged to read the Full Notice, the Settlement Agreement, the Preliminary Approval Order, the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law After Trial, and other documents, all of which are available to you at www.MALightsSettlement.com.

You may also obtain further information regarding the Settlement on the settlement website, or by telephoning the Settlement Administrator toll-free at (844) 836-3605 or by emailing questions to the Settlement Administrator at claims@MALightsSettlement.com. You may also contact Class Counsel with any questions by mail at Shapiro Haber & Urmy LLP, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston, MA 02210, by toll-free telephone at (800) 287-8119, or by email at shu@shulaw.com.

After grim payrolls, focus turns to economy

With a June Federal Reserve interest rate hike likely off the table following Friday's dismal jobs data, U.S. equity investors may shift their focus again to whether the economy is losing too much steam to allow stocks to advance.

Investors will comb economic data over the next few weeks to see if the weak payrolls report reflected a wider trend in the U.S. economy or was an outlier. A first hint of the central bank's view of that could come Monday with a speech on the economic outlook by Fed Chair Janet Yellen.

The fresh economic worries could help keep the market mired below record highs reached in May 2015, even though the Standard & Poor's 500 index notched a third straight month of gains this May and most sectors are up since the start of the year.

"The broader question is whether the economy is gaining the kind of momentum and traction that we need for a market that has been looking toward new highs," said Quincy Krosby, market strategist at Prudential Financial in Newark, New Jersey.

"No one is out to suggest the economy is doing a major turnaround because of this number, but we now need to see a clutch of data that suggests that this is a one-off," she said.

It may take a few weeks to get a better picture of the economic outlook, with the economic and earnings calendars light for next week. The Fed meets the following week, which will also bring data on retail sales and producer prices.

Wall Street's top

"No one is out to suggest the economy is doing a major turnaround because of this number, but we now need to see a clutch of data that suggests that this is a one-off." Krosby banks now unanimously expect the Fed to leave interest rates unchanged this month, a Reuters poll showed on Friday.

While investors and company executives have worried that higher rates will dampen spending, now a weak economy is considered a bigger risk for the market.

S&P 500 earnings, which fell 5 percent in the first quarter from a year ago in their third straight quarterly decline, are still expected to pick up in the second half of the year. REUTERS

Muhammad Ali GETTY IMAGES

American Muslims remember Ali as hero for their faith

From the turmoil of civil rights and black Muslim movements of the 1960s to the darkest days after Sept. 11, 2001, Ali was a hero that U.S. Muslims could share with part of the American mainstream.

The death of Muhammad Ali cost American Muslims perhaps their greatest hero, a goodwill ambassador for Islam in a country where their minority faith is widely misunderstood and mistrusted.

Muslims remembered

Ali for many familiar reasons, hailing him as a champion of social justice, a lifelong supporter of charitable works and an opponent of the U.S. war in Vietnam.

Moreover, they said, he was a Muslim that a largely Christian country came to admire, even if Ali shocked and scared much of U.S. society after he joined the Nation of Islam and changed his name from Cassius Clay in 1964.

"When we look at the history of the African-American community, one important factor in popularizing Islam in America is Muhammad Ali," Warith Deen Mohammed II, son of former Nation of Islam leader, said.

With some 3.3 million adherents in the United States, Muslims make up about 1 percent of the population, largely immigrants and African-Americans who have embraced the religion.

Although they have integrated into society better than some of their brethren in Europe, American Muslims face hardships even as the United States grows demographically less white and less Christian.

Since 2001, they have suffered backlash from those Americans who equate all Muslims with those who have attacked civilians out of some jihadist cause.

Decades before, black Muslim leaders such as Elijah Muhammad and Malcolm X rattled the white establishment as religious and ethnic minorities who demanded equality for their people. Elijah Muhammad preached a version that denounced white oppression and opposed integration of the races.

Ali came to be widely revered, but there was a time when he was rejected, mostly by whites by also by some black leaders for his bold statements against white supremacy and for his refusal to embrace the model epitomized by Martin Luther King, a Christian. REUTERS

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

GETTING THE SHAKES

The primaries are rattling to a close, Trump takes a licking and the White House has an honesty issue. Here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

CALIFORNIA SCHEMIN'

Make no mistake: Hillary Clinton is going over the edge this week. With a caucus in North Dakota and primaries in Montana, New Jersey, New Mexico and South Dakota, she is virtually certain to finally have enough delegates to clinch the Democratic nomination. But the California vote could still be a problem. Bernie "Relentless" Sanders has been hounding her in the Golden State, and if he beats or even ties her on Tuesday — you can bet his fans will howl even louder about her alleged weaknesses as a candidate.

CRAWLING FROM THE WRECKAGE

Last week was all squealing tires and twisted metal for Republican contender Donald Trump as he skidded between blistering reports about his university,

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

his fundraising for vets and his comments about a judge's Mexican heritage. Of course the billionaire from New York is acting like it's nothing, but keep an eye on the pundits and polls to see if he has been hurt. You can bet Clinton will. Her fierce attacks recently produced some of her best headlines yet, and if she sees Trump bloodied it will be like Shark Week has come early.

GETTING GLITCHY WITH IT

You know your department has as problem when even the boss is calling someone's action "stupid and clumsy and inappropriate," but that's what Secretary of State John Kerry said. His biting words appeared in the wake of reports the State Department purposely edited out part of a news conference before posting it online, then — when caught — tried to claim it was an electronic glitch. The deleted portion was about the administration misleading the public over secret talks with Iran. Anyway, the House Oversight Committee wants State to explain who ordered the erasure by mid-week. Odds of them getting that answer? Let me put it this way — I suspect the Cavaliers have a better chance of hoisting the NBA trophy.

Senior Republicans criticize Donald Trump's remarks on Hispanic judge

Trump has accused U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel of harboring a bias against him in lawsuits involving fraud allegations against Trump University, his now-defunct real estate school.

Senior Republicans distanced themselves on Sunday from Donald Trump's comments about a Mexican-American judge, saying they were worried that the tone of his presidential campaign could enrage Latinos, who are a growing U.S. voting bloc.

The presumptive Republican nominee has suggested U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel's Mexican-American heritage had influenced the judge's opinion because of Trump's campaign pledge to build a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said he "couldn't disagree more" with Trump's comments about the judge.

"I am concerned about the Hispanic vote. America is changing," McConnell told "Meet The Press." "I think it's a big mistake for our party to write off Latino Americans. I am concerned about that and I hope he will change his direction on that."

Democrats have accused Trump of racially tinged rhetoric about Latinos, including his description of Mexican immigrants as "criminals and rapists" in the speech he gave a year ago launching his campaign.

Such rhetoric has exacerbated friction between Trump and Republican party leaders such as McConnell and House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan. For the past few years, the party has been trying to broaden its appeal with Latino voters and senior Republicans are concerned that Trump's comments could cost the party votes, not only in the presidential race but in congressional races as well.

Former House of Representatives Speaker

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

Newt Gingrich, who has been mentioned as a possible running mate to Trump, called Trump's comments about the judge "inexcusable."

"This is one of the worst mistakes Trump has made," Gingrich told Fox News.

Curiel was born in Indiana to Mexican-immigrant parents.

"He is a member of a club or society very strongly pro-Mexican, which is all fine. But I say he's got bias. I want to build a wall," Trump said in an interview on Sunday on "Face the Nation." REUTERS

Demi & Wilmer are 'better as best friends'

Demi Lovato and Wilmer Valderrama have decided to give their hearts a break. The "Cool for the Summer" singer, 23, and "That '70s Show" star, 36, announced on Instagram late Friday night that they've broken up. "After almost 6 loving and wonderful years together, we have decided to end our relationship," Lovato writes. "This was an incredibly difficult decision for both of us, but we have realized more than anything that we are better as best friends." She signed the letter "with only love," which pretty much sums up the pair's relationship. Drama-free and happy, they often gushed about each other openly in interviews. There's actually nothing snarky to say here, so in lieu of a pun involving Lovato's "Cool for the Summer," we'll just wish them well.

Get you a BFF like Matt Damon and Ben Affleck

Whatever else happens to Ben Affleck, he'll always have Matt Damon. The friendship that began with a shared Oscar win and all the tabloid fodder that has come along since was canonized on Saturday night, when the duo were named Guys of the Decade at Spike TV's Guys Choice Awards. Perez Hilton reports that Affleck knows just how lucky he is. "I did Gigli and Matt did that Liberace movie and all of a sudden it all seemed out of reach," he said. "Then I did ['Batman v Superman'] and all of a sudden it was back in reach again." Um, you do know everyone hated that one too, right? Maybe not though — Matt's probably hiding all the bad press from him. We should all be so lucky.

Taylor Swift sings through her heartache

Nobody loves love like Taylor Swift. Just days after Swift, 26, broke up with DJ Calvin Harris after a 15-month romance, she surprised a couple in New Jersey at their wedding reception. The pair were married in a hospital because the groom's mother was sick, US Weekly reports. He's a big fan of Swift's, so his sister invited the singer to their after-party, where she sang "Blank Space" and played her own accompaniment on a keyboard. Swift and Harris, 32, called off their relationship last week reportedly because she wanted marriage and a family, and he decided he'd rather become another cautionary tale in her latest breakup ballad. Looking forward to that new single, girl.

Save your tears for Gigi and Zayn

At least there's one celebrity relationship that didn't end last week. Model Gigi Hadid, 21, and former One Direction member Zayn Malik, 23, have not split up despite rumors they were dunzo after nearly seven months of dating. Just Jared Jr. reports. "Gigi and Zayn are still together," according to a source close to the couple. "The break-up reports are completely false." The original report of the breakup came Thursday night from E!, whose own anonymous source blamed drama at Hadid's birthday party back in April for leading to the split. "Zayn and Gigi did break up, but they can likely get back together tomorrow," that source claimed. So until it's Instagram official, let's everyone calm down.

Andy Samberg feels bad for Bieber

The Lonely Island boys talk about sending up the music industry with "Popstar."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Technically, Andy Samberg is a musician. He's even technically part of a hit-making band.

Fifteen years ago the "Saturday Night Live" alum formed the Lonely Island with lifelong friends Akiva Schaffer and Jorma Taccone, whose bread and butter are song parodies: "Lazy Sunday," "D— in a Box" and the jokey tunes that dot their second feature film, "Popstar: Never Stop Never Stopping."

Samberg's also married to an actual serious musician, Joanna Newsom. Surely they've never thought about combining their talents into some strange hybrid?

"Her fanbase would probably be disappointed in that — rightfully," Samberg, now 37, quips.

"As fans of her work I'd say we'd also be disappointed," Taccone adds.

The three are here to speak about "Popstar," their follow-up to 2007's "Hot Rod." They play a broken-up rap boy band — part Beastie Boys, part Backstreet Boys. One of them, Samberg's Connor, went on to a supersonic solo career, while the other two have fallen on hard times. The movie, done as a star-studded mockumentary, finds Con-

Akiva Schaffer, Andy Samberg and Jorma Taccone plays former boy band members who struggle to reconnect after one of them becomes a solo star in "Popstar: Never Stop Never Stopping." GLEN WILSON

Mariah the hero

Making a send-up of the pop music world means lots of cameos, some of them friends they knew from their years on "Saturday Night Live." Ringo Starr was someone producer Judd Apatow hooked them up with. And miraculously they never had to have an uncomfortable conversation with Mariah Carey, whose own attempt at crossing into movies was the notorious "Glitter." Not that she probably fretted that much over it, thinks Samberg.

"I think her record-breaking number of No. 1 hits maybe gave her solace," he jokes.

nor finally falling from favor himself when his latest album is poorly received and his gaudy megaconcerts start underselling.

"The thing at the forefront, which I thought was fun to play around with, was how social media and media and the number of outlets have changed the landscape of the industry," Samberg explains. They wanted to explore what is now expected of artists — what they make public, how they form relationships with their fans, how that level of fame affects their long-time relationships.

It's a satire at once vicious and empathetic, hating the game but not the players. (Though it reserves true ire for the staffers at TMZ.) They even feel for one of the film's obvious inspirations, Justin Bieber.

"We definitely empathize with Justin," Samberg says. "We've worked with him a few times and he's a good guy. We respect his music a lot, actually." There are some references to the Bieber doc "Never Say Never," but they're not potshots, Samberg says. "We thought that [would offer] good jumping-off points for crazier jokes. And the title, obviously, feels like his title, which makes it seem it's a lot more about him than we intended. "But I hope he likes it!"

Rigid workplace rules may be outdated, but basic social graces never go out of style.

JENNIFER SAWYER
 @MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Next time you consider shouting to a coworker over the cubicle wall, think twice. Traditional etiquette might seem like a thing of the past, but old-fashioned social graces still go a long way in the office. We spoke with Daniel Post Senning, the great-great-grandson of etiquette pioneer Emily Post and co-author of "The Etiquette Advantage in Business" about the biggest manners mistakes in the workplace. To make the office a little more pleasant for everyone, follow his advice.

Mistake No. 1: Lack of social awareness

One of the biggest reasons workers leave their places of employment is a lack of respect or appreciation, Senning explains. "Remember that business is built on relationships," he says, "so awareness of others and how your actions impact others is essential." Small gestures make the office a pleasant place to be. Greet coworkers with a hello when you arrive, look people in the eye and give colleagues your full attention during a conversation. And of course, always remember to say "thank you."

Mistake No. 2: Poor communication choices

"A mistake that people make is not thinking about how their choice of communication starts to become part of the message itself," Senning says. "When you get something handwritten or personalized, it says 'This really matters.' Similarly, if you text your boss about why you're not going to make the most important meeting of the year, that might not show the seriousness the situation deserves."

Mistake No. 3: Clashing with coworkers

Senning says, "People don't take enough care with their work relationships, [but] the quality of our lives depends on it." He suggests a twofold approach for dealing with challenging work relationships: Learning to have difficult conversations respectfully so tensions don't escalate, and being diligent about respecting colleagues' privacy and boundaries.

Mistake No. 4: Failure to use discretion

Office gossip is always tempting, but discussing a co-worker's personal life reflects poorly on you and the professional environment. Find out surprising information about a colleague? Do (or say) nothing, and just let it go. "Learn to let people have their private space and time and lives," Senning says.

Mistake No. 5: Carelessness about common space

"Some of the most common conflict areas are shared spaces in the office," Senning says. Failure to keep a tidy kitchen space, or loudly carrying on personal phone calls make for an unpleasant experience for everyone. Instead, lead by example. "Hold yourself accountable," he says, "maybe even to a standard higher than your own."

eSports owner, former NBA star, actor Rick Fox 1-on-1 with Metro

The former Lakers and Celtics star is a prominent figure in the eSports revolution.

MATTHEW BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Rick Fox was a key player on one of the coolest teams ever in arguably the coolest sport on the planet. The NBA has street cred like you read about, and the early 2000s Lakers led the sports world in swagger at the time.

Back then, video gamers had a certain stereotype attached to them too. Still, in some people's minds, video gamers are part of a "geek" culture.

Competition though is almost always "cool" and Fox is at the forefront of a competition revolution. The former NBA star, who is also an established Hollywood actor, owns an eSports team and is now one of the more prominent figures associated with eSports.

Fox went one-on-one with Metro's Matt Burke and talked about the growth of eSports, how he got into it, and — of course — some NBA.

As much as I want to ask you a million question about the '90s Celtics, I'll try to stick mostly to eSports. How'd you get interested in eSports?

Well, I'm a video gamer at heart and it really became a connector between me and my son. He was going to school in Boston and I was out in L.A. and playing games online was a way for us to connect. His passions for the video game industry grew and so did mine. We've grown with it and it's now grown to a level where you have masters of their fields and people are making a living from it. It's a new expression of pro sports.

When did it first occur to you that you could actually own an eSports franchise and why did you think this might be something you'd want to pursue?

I was aware for awhile that ownership was attainable and that franchises were popping up. I wasn't aware at the time at how much time you had to commit to it if you wanted to do it right. You're really running a startup company.

I thought to myself, "If you're really going to compete here, it's gonna take a real commitment." I have day-to-day conversations with my team and I'm invested in a number of different areas of the business. It's all-consuming.

I don't think I would recommend doing this with one foot in. That's a good way to lose a lot of money. But if you're passionate and if it's a part of your life anyway and you have the ability to understand and execute a business plan ... if you're OK with being an owner and not having an impact on the actual play, then maybe it's something you should look at. It's not sitting down and playing a couple hours of "Madden." It's a business.

How much does it cost to start up or buy an eSports team like this?

It depends on how many franchises you choose to have expressions in. It depends on how committed you want to be in supporting your players.

It's around a million dollars just to get a slot, and then you build it from there. It's unlike owning an NBA team where you're one team in a league. Here you'll have like three teams in three major leagues that compete year-round. These are individual athletes that compete year-round. It's about growing a global brand and that requires capital and infrastructure.

Are you a Mark Cuban type owner at these competitions? Are you going nuts from the sidelines?

[Laughs] I think I resemble more of a Mark Cuban type than some of the other owners I witnessed in the NBA. It's hard for me at 6-foot-7 in an eSports arena to hide.

I'm always involved in the process week-to-week and I have my ear to the ground. The whole thing keeps me on the edge of my seat. It's hard for me not to track it and not be emotional.

A big talking point here in Boston now is whether or not the Celtics could ever reel-in a big-name free agent like a Kevin Durant. Why do you think Boston has been unable to land a big-time free agent over the years and do you think it could finally happen soon?

I would argue that they have in the past. It's not the traditional free agent route but they've gotten big names in trades, they've drafted them. Yeah, there's a sense of rejection or failure when you don't get the big name. But it's not because of the city, it's not because of the history, it's not because of the money. Every individual is different.

It's funny, I think this generation of player almost aspires for "less spotlight." They aspire to play with their friends. They strategize on how they can play together.

From my era — being a Celtic or a Laker — that's what it was all about. Now teams like San Antonio become attractive landing spots because of the recent success.

Players now didn't grow up in the '80s but they still might be intimidated by going to one of these top tier franchises like the Celtics or Lakers.

Only a select few want that pressure. You don't want to sign one of these guys for big money and then figure out that they can't handle the pressure.

The Celtics actually tried to bring you back in 2004 in a trade but you retired soon after. Was there any thought on your part of actually coming back and playing for the Celtics a second time?

Oh ya. I wanted to. I did do a physical to see where my body was at. I was fresh off of surgery and I knew I had lost a lot. I was told that there was a chance that I would have to walk around with a cane for the rest of my life if I had kept playing. So I was honest with Danny [Ainge]. I told him that I didn't know mentally if I could "get there" and if I could lay it out on the line. I knew only one way to play.

That ounce of fear of injury would have affected me mentality and I couldn't do that. To push through it would have been unfair to myself and the Celtics so I thought it was best to part ways.

It would have been great. My son was still in school in Boston and I could've played in front of him but it just didn't happen.

Cavs or Warriors?

Warriors in seven. I always love to see a team win it all in seven. I think the Warriors win but it's hard for me to not pull for [former Lakers teammate] Tyronn Lue.
